In addition to having your Will prepared, you may also like to consider letting those who may find themselves responsible for your funeral know of your wishes in that respect, and there may be other instructions or considerations that you wish to make known after your death.

The following is a list of suggestions only and is not intended to be definitive or legally binding, though you may like to keep it with your Will so that it is available to your next-of-kin and your Executors. You may like to consult third-party websites to learn more about the options for organ donation or simple funerals, for example, before recording your preferences.

Important documents

This checklist and your Will are the key documents which will help your family to arrange your funeral and your Executor(s) to administer your Estate. It will help if you are able to leave a guide to the location of other important documents which your Executor(s) will need in order to administer your Estate and ensure that all the relevant authorities are notified. The following list contains many of the most common items but it is not intended to be definitive. You may wish to leave a record of passwords and PIN numbers separately.

Document	Location
Your Will

Your remains

If you have a funeral plan in place you may have dealt with some or all of the following questions already. If not, you may find this checklist helpful in guiding your friends and family towards the type of funeral you desire as well as some of the other arrangements following your death that they may otherwise be unsure about.

State what should happen to your body or the name of the person who should make that decision. Say here if you wish to donate some or all of your organs

Nurses attending the death normally lay out the body. If there is another person who you would like to assist or replace the nurse(s), identify them here

Would you like your next of kin to give consent if a post-mortem is necessary after your death?

Yes

No

Where would you like your body to rest before your funeral takes place?

At home

In hospital
(if possible)

At the funeral director's
Chapel of Rest

Your preference for burial or cremation

Burial

Cremation

Cremation only: what should happen to your ashes?

Burial only: identify any reserved or preferred burial space or state your preferred choice of burial ground

Churchyard

Cemetery

Woodland burial site

Your funeral arrangements

Identify any publications in which you would like your death announced

Would you like a funeral service?

Yes

No

Who would you like to organise your funeral?

Your preferred funeral director (if possible)

Cremation only: if you would like a funeral service at a church or other venue as well as at the crematorium, identify the venue and leave separate instructions about what should happen at, and who should attend, each service

State your religion or other philosophy by which your funeral service should be guided

Who should lead the service? This could, for example, be a relative, friend, Minister of Religion, Humanist Minister or Civil Celebrant

Do you wish to restrict the service to family only, or just family and friends, or extend it to all-comers?

Are there any particular invitees whose attendance might otherwise be overlooked?

Who would you like to give the main address about your life? Nominate more than one person, if desired.

Would you like your friends to have the opportunity to speak about you at the service?

Yes

No

Nominate those who you would like to act as coffin-bearers, if not the funeral director's pall-bearers

Would you like flowers at your funeral?

Yes

No

One flower per person

Alternatively, donations should be made to: (if a charity, state full name and charity no, if known)

List here any specific requests for hymns, psalms, songs and pieces of music, and identify your preferences for opening music and closing music

List here any specific requests for readings, poems, texts and those who you would like to read them

State whether or not you would like some form of gathering after your funeral and what form it should take (specific location, invitees, type of food/drink etc)

Yes

No

Use this space for any additional instructions. For example, you may prefer a family-only funeral and a later memorial service for friends
